

Outstanding Undergraduate Student Research Award

About the Award

The HPEB Outstanding Student Undergraduate Research Award is presented to an outstanding undergraduate student who has participated in research activities under the direction of or in collaboration with a faculty member in the Department of Health Promotion, Education, and Behavior. Eligible candidates must be Juniors or Seniors and be presenting work at Discover USC. Students are nominated for this award by faculty in HPEB. Students selected for this award are based on their participation in public health research, including assisting with research projects, conducting independent research, or communicating research findings in presentations or publications.

Award Criteria

- Engaged in meaningful research to improve public health
- Demonstrate a commitment to the field of health promotion, education, and behavior
- Demonstrated track record of professionalism (e.g., showing up on time, working effectively with community members) when conducting research
- Evidence of intellectual curiosity and independence (e.g., seeking research funding, presenting findings at conferences)

Procedure for Nominating an Undergraduate Student

Faculty nominating a student should complete the attached nomination form. Please submit the nomination to Dr. Brie Turner-McGrievy (brie@sc.edu), Chair of the HPEB Scholarship and Award Committee by March 25.

This nomination should include:

- Nomination form with student name and degree being received;
- Letter of recommendation that includes the following information:
 - Evaluation of the nominee's overall academic performance and professionalism;
 - A description of their research experience and commitment to public health;
 - Short discussion of the nominee's distinguishing personal characteristics (these may include leadership skills, communication skills, or service activities);
- An example of nominee's research (e.g., abstract, poster presentation);
- CV/resume;
- An unofficial academic transcript.
